

Bank of Baroda

Capital infusion: concerns on capital constraints recede but infusion EPS and ROE dilutive - ALERT

- Large capital infusion by the government: According to CNBC reports, the Indian government has infused ~Rs100bn in PSU banks with stakes of <57-58%. BOB has received Rs35bn and assuming current market prices, the infusion would lead to ~10% dilution and would take the government's stake in BOB from 54% to 58% and lead to ~175bps increase in BOB's Tier 1.
- Positives - No constraints on capital now: The capital infusion addresses concerns about capital constraints not only in the near term but also longer term, as the increase in the government's stake to 58% leaves leeway for further capital issuance without government help in the future.
- Negatives: EPS and ROE dilutive, capital marginally higher than required: Assuming current prices, EPS dilution would be ~6% over FY11-12E and ROEs would be brought down by ~250bps to ~20-20.5% for FY12-13. Given strong internal capital generation, we estimate that it would take more than three years for BOB to leverage up again, leading to lower ROEs over that period.
- Prefer PNB now vs. BOB: Though we currently have no official confirmation of the same, we assume the infusion to be 100% equity. Given very low dilution for PNB, we would prefer PNB vs. BOB as the capital infusion would widen ROE differentials for BOB vs. PNB from 200bps earlier to 500bps now and valuations would be on par on a post diluted book basis.
- Maintain Overweight: Though the news is positive for PSU banks in general as it addresses their capital issues, we believe for BOB the large dilution is at best neutral, given the large EPS and ROE dilution. We continue with our Overweight on BOB, given superior asset quality but would prefer PNB for return ratio differentials post the capital infusion.
