

Public Lab Regional Barnraising 2016

Saturday and Sunday July 9th and 10th | Val Verde, Los Angeles, CA
Open to all! Join Public Lab's third annual Regional Barnraising!

Who is Public Lab?

Public Lab is a community where you can learn how to investigate environmental concerns. Using inexpensive do-it-together techniques, we seek to change how people see the world in environmental, social, and political terms.

What is a Regional Barnraising?

It's an annual event hosted by the Public Lab community. In the spirit of bringing a community together to collectively raise a structure such as a barn, Regional Barnraising participants come together to test environmental monitoring tools in the field, develop new research projects, share out about environmental concerns, and develop strategies to address them. The event is hosted in an "unconference style." This means that people join to

Who can join the Barnraising?

The event is open to everyone. Participants will include people from many interests and backgrounds including local residents with environmental concerns, technologists, designers, social scientists, and community organizers.

How do I register and keep up-to-date on the event?

The registration form will be posted on publiclab.org/barnraising. Before the event, we will be hosting project ideas and questions on the Public Lab Los Angeles Google group, link to the group can be found at:

<http://publiclab.org/barnraising> participate and collaborate rather than just present, talk, and listen.