“The difficulties of helping one’s fellow man in post-recession America are scrutinized with heartrending intimacy in “The Overnighters,” director Jesse Moss’ powerful documentary portrait of a North Dakota town that has seen a massive influx of aspiring oil-field workers in recent years. Our entry point into this modern-day Steinbeckian parable is through Jay Reinke, a Lutheran pastor who decided to open his church doors to provide these laborers with shelter, and who becomes as rich and thorny a film subject as any of the issues examined here: the challenge of community, the limits of compassion and charity, and, above all, the uncertainty of the future. With critical support, this tough-minded, admirably unresolved film should have no trouble courting further festival play and arthouse attention.” (Variety, 1/25/14)

Q/A with director Jesse Moss will follow the film. Please join us for this unique opportunity to discuss our response to homelessness. For more information contact Michele Dauber (mldauber@gmail.com) or Carrie LeRoy (Carrie.LeRoy@skadden.com) or call 650-521-6005.
